FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF DEMOCRACY

Exercise 7

Democracy exists in a country because the people believe in it and practice its principles. Democratic principles are defined as the ideas which most people believe are essential for a democracy. We will call these the “signposts” of democracy because when we see them, they are signs that the country is on the road to democracy.

The Road to Democracy

Assume you are travelling on a road to a country where the perfect democracy exists. The road has many wrong turns, bumps and dangers which make it difficult to reach the perfect democracy. However, there are signposts along the way which guide you in the right direction. The signposts name the basic principles that people in a democracy support. You are determined to find that perfect democratic country.

Procedures:

Divide the participants into small groups and ask each group to:

1. Draw a “Road to Democracy” map and give your “perfect democracy” a name.

2. List the basic principles of democracy on a separate sheet. Now label the signposts along the road which give information about the basic principles of democracy. These signposts should name basic essentials that must exist in order to have the perfect democracy.

3. List the factors, which prevent you from reaching your perfect democracy. Now label the signs for wrong turns, obstacles and dangers along the road. These signs indicate difficulties in achieving democracy.

4. At the end of the road is your perfect democracy. List the benefits people will have in your perfect democracy, in the space on the map.

5. Compare your group’s map with that of other groups. Did you name the same signposts, obstacles, dangers and benefits as the others? Ask participants to give an example and the meaning of each signpost.

Signposts of Democracy

People from around the world have identified the basic principles, which must exist in order to have a democratic government. These principles often become a part of the constitution or bill of rights in a democratic society. Though no two democratic countries are exactly alike, people in democracies support many of the same basic principles and desire the same benefits from their government. The following are examples of the principles referred to as signposts of democracy, which will be used throughout the book:

Citizen Participation
One of the most basic signposts of a democracy is citizen participation in government. Participation is the key role of citizens in democracy. It is not only their right, but it is their duty. Citizen participation may take many forms including standing for election, voting in elections, becoming informed, debating issues, attending community or civic meetings, being members of private voluntary organizations, paying taxes, and even protesting. Participation builds a better democracy.

Equality
Democratic societies emphasize the principle that all people are equal. Equality means that all individuals are valued equally, have equal opportunities, and may not be discriminated against because of their race, religion, ethnic group, gender or sexual orientation. In a democracy, individuals and groups still maintain their right to have different cultures, personalities, languages and beliefs.

Political Tolerance
Democratic societies are politically tolerant. This means that while the majority of the people rule in a democracy, the rights of the minority must be protected. People who are not in power must be allowed to organize and speak out. Minorities are sometimes referred to as the opposition because they may have ideas which are different from the majority. Individual citizens must also learn to be tolerant of each other. A democratic society is often composed of people from different cultures, racial, religious and ethnic groups who have viewpoints different from the majority of the population. A democratic society is enriched by diversity. If the majority deny rights to and destroy their opposition, then they also destroy democracy. One goal of democracy is to make the best possible decision for the society. To achieve this, respect for all people and their points of view is needed. Decisions are more likely to be accepted, even by those who oppose them, if all citizens have been allowed to discuss, debate and question them.

Accountability
In a democracy, elected and appointed officials have to be accountable to the people. They are responsible for their actions. Officials must make decisions and perform their duties according to the will and wishes of the people, not for themselves.

Transparency
For government to be accountable the people must be aware of what is happening in the country. This is referred to as transparency in government. A transparent government holds public meetings and allows citizens to attend. In a democracy, the press and the people are able to get information about what decisions are being made, by whom and why.

Regular, Free and Fair Elections
One way citizens of the country express their will is by electing officials to represent them in government. Democracy insists that these elected officials are chosen and peacefully removed from office in a free and fair manner. Intimidation, corruption and threats to citizens during or before an election are against the principles of democracy. In a democracy, elections are held regularly every so many years. Participation in elections should not be based on a citizen's wealth. For free and fair elections to occur, most adult citizens should have the right to stand for government office. Additionally, obstacles should not exist which make it difficult for people to vote.

Economic Freedom
People in a democracy must have some form of economic freedom. This means that the government allows some private ownership of property and businesses, and that the people are allowed to choose their own work and labor unions. The role the government should play in the economy is open to debate, but it is generally accepted that free markets should exist in a democracy and the state should not totally control the economy. Some argue that the state should play a stronger role in countries where great inequality of wealth exists due to past discrimination or other unfair practices.

Control of the Abuse of Power
Democratic societies try to prevent any elected official or group of people from misusing or abusing their power. One of the most common abuses of power is corruption. Corruption occurs when government officials use public funds for their own benefit or exercise power in an illegal manner. Various methods have been used in different countries to protect against these abuses. Frequently the government is structured to limit the powers of the branches of government: to have independent courts and agencies with power to act against any illegal action by an elected official or branch of government; to allow for citizen participation and elections; and to check for police abuse of power.

Bill of Rights
Many democratic countries also choose to have a bill of rights to protect people against abuse of power. A bill of rights is a list of rights and freedoms guaranteed to all people in the country. When a bill of rights becomes part of a country's constitution, the courts have the power to enforce these rights. A bill of rights limits the power of government and may also impose duties on individuals and organizations.

Accepting the Results of Elections
In democratic elections, there are winners and losers. Often the losers in an election believe so strongly that their party or candidate is the best one, that they refuse to accept the results of the election. This is against democratic principles. The consequences of not accepting the result of an election may be a government that is ineffective and cannot make decisions. It may even result in violence which is also against democracy.

Human Rights
All democracies strive to respect and protect the human rights of citizens. Human rights mean those values that reflect respect for human life and human dignity. Democracy emphasizes the value of every human being. Examples of human rights include freedom of expression, freedom of association, freedom of assembly, the right to equality and the right to education.

Multi-Party System
In order to have a multi-party system, more than one political party must participate in elections and play a role in government. A multi-party system allows for opposition to the party, which wins the election. This helps provide the government with different viewpoints on issues. Additionally, a multi-party system provides voters with a choice of candidates, parties and policies to vote for. Historically, when a country only has one party, the result has been a dictatorship.

The Rule of Law
In a democracy no one is above the law, not even a king or an elected President. This is called the rule of law. It means that everyone must obey the law and be held accountable if they violate it. Democracy also insists that the law be equally, fairly and consistently enforced. This is sometimes referred to as “due process of law.”

Exercise 8

Is Democratia on the Road to Democracy?

Look at the following situations and decide whether each is a sign that Democratia is on the road to democracy. Give reasons for your answers.

1. The Legislature has passed a law requiring all youth between the age of 4 and 16 to attend school. Government schools are provided.
2. Members of one of the local churches held a political forum and only allowed representatives from one political party to attend.

3. The Parliament had a gallery built in their assembly room so that visitors could watch the proceedings.

4. The constitution requires a Presidential election every five years.

5. Teachers in the school of Democratia do not like their working conditions and decide to go on strike.

6. The police stop and shoot a known criminal. The criminal was not resisting arrest but had killed other people.

7. The constitution says that only people over the age of 18 who have lived in the country for more than one year may vote.

8. A law requires all working citizen to belong to a union.

9. The constitution requires all working adults to pay a small amount of money when they vote in order to help finance the expense of the election.

10. No convicted prisoner may stand as candidate in an election.

11. One political party, which loses the election, demands that another election be held immediately.

12. The President is required to give a report to the people every year explaining what he or she has done and the plans for the upcoming year.

13. The government determines what are fair prices for all food sold in the country.
